Darja Fišer, University of Ljubljana (SI) CLARIN ERIC director of User Involvement Integrating CLARIN language resources into the classroom environment

Despite the increasing amount, range, maturity and availability of language resources and technologies, they are still highly underrepresented in curricula and teaching materials. This is being successfully mitigated by recent bottom-up projects that have developed digital state-of-the-art educational materials and on-line tutorials initiated with support from the CLARIN research infrastructure. These projects focus on various types of corpora, lexical, terminological, grammatical and stylistic resources, as well as mono- and multilingual language technologies, such as The Language Bank of Finland collection of language resources or the WebLicht environment for automatic annotation of text corpora. The developed materials are suitable for researchers as well as educators of the future generations of digitally literate users in the fields of linguistics and language pedagogy, but also in literary studies and other disciplines of digital humanities. In the talk we give an overview of the educational activities taken up in the context of CLARIN, discuss the lessons learned and sketch future plans.
